THE HEART OF THE HOME.

A fireplace gives character as well as warmth to whole room. From the aborigines' fire on a flat rock the steps in the development of the finished fireplace of today have been few and far between. The crude device smoked their huts, and our fireplaces often smoke our homes.

Poets have sung of the ideal fireplace—one that warms you and is a pleasure to behold; one that extends a cheerful welcome to the guest and is a delight to dream before—a fireplace that will make the poorest hut as pleasant as a palace. The writer not of his smoking, its chilling drafts and noxious gases. However, ideal fireplaces surrounded with frames can and have been built, the poet's song realized, and all objectionable features eliminated.

The perfect fire must diffuse and reflect the maximum of heat from a given amount of fuel without the escape of smoke or gases into the room to be heated, and at the same time ventilate uniformly.

Large sums of money are often spent on the mantle or frame and the fireplace itself is left to the mercy of someone who does not understand its proper proportions and construction. The most common fault in building is that the throat of the chimney is made too large. This was originally necessary for the accommodation of the chimney sweep, and the natural consequence was that all of the warm air which should have warmed the room went up the chimney.

No other way of heating can ever be as cheerful and healthful as the open fire.

The brick fireplace is far more artistic than the old stove mantel with its hideous accompaniment of mottled tile. However, brick has the great disadvantage of being almost impossible to keep clean, and as even a well-regulated fireplace may sometimes smoke, and as ashes of dust will gather, this is truly a drawback.

The most beautiful effects may be obtained by using tile. These tiles are made in every conceivable shape and size, as well as in every possible color. For the bedroom or the "colonial room" we have the soft, satin-finished creams and whites, or the dainty delicately glazed tiles.

Any of these tiles may be washed just as you would an old piece of porcelain, with soap and water, and thus be kept in good condition.

The heart of the home, as one fire worshiper has called the fireplace, should give character to the whole room. Study well what you want to be, but while you make it a joy to the eye, see that it is scientifically constructed and will adequately heat the room that it is intended to heat.—Los Angeles Herald.

The mayor thanked them and said, "Gentlemen, I am a friend to the I skingmen. I extend to you the freedom of the city. I also tender you the use of a band of music in the parade, and I trust you will enjoy a pleasant day with us."

KING OF INDOOR SPORTS.

Story Telling as a Pastime Ranks High in Esteem of Men. The shorter a story is the better it is. Put that right down in your notebook, where you keep your stories. The other night I spent an hour with a man who had such a notebook and 'tis is the first fact I told him. And I added: "To tell a story well, but it on both ends until it is so small that you can put it in your watch. If you have a thin watch, so much the better."

Perhaps you have never thought of it in this way, but story telling, as a matter of cold fact, is one of the most popular of our indoor pastimes. I won't say that it is the king of sports, but it ranks high in the esteem of men.

You doubt this. Let me illustrate: Ludwig is through with a hard day's work at the office. He strolls down to his club. He sits down with two men. They have been seated about two cocktails, when some one tells Ludwig: "I've got a new one." And that reminds Ludwig of a new one he has just heard, and so on it goes, around the endless circle of tales.

Isn't it so? Haven't you done it yourself? Then you must realize that story telling has its part as the avocation of many men of many minds. It relieves the strain of the day. It brings the guffaw to lips that have been a very business like straight line through the tolling hours. And sometimes—to introduce the inevitable contrast—it brings pain.

Yes, pain, for how many of these men who tell stories really know anything at all of the art? I am answering my own questions today, so I will tell you. Very, very few. And the biggest mistake made by them all is that of lengthening out their stories instead of compressing them to the smallest possible compass of time and space.—Frank Fogarty in San Francisco Chronicle.

The Largest Gymnasium.

The new gymnasium of Northwestern university at Evanston, Ill., one of the suburbs of Chicago, is not only the largest and most complete in the world, but it is a building that marks a new departure in gymnasium construction as well. It is a building about 230 feet long by 120 feet wide, constructed of steel, stone and brick, a great part of the interior being finished in marble. From an athletic standpoint, the main feature is the great indoor playing field and track, which takes up two-thirds of the building. It is an inclosure 215 feet long by 120 feet wide, with a floor composed of a mixture of black loam and clay. During the football season the teams line up against each other in practice games in the gymnasium, and the scrimmages are as fierce as those played on the regular football gridiron. The running track which encircles the field is the largest permanent indoor track in the country and measures just 10 laps to the mile. A clearer idea of the vastness of this indoor field may be gained from athletic director Gillespie's statement that it can accommodate four basketball games simultaneously, or allow all the track and field games of a regular collegiate meet to be held.—Popular Mechanics.

Countess Has a "Runin" With Restaurant Keeper

New York, N. Y., Sept. 19.—The countess de Swirsky has had a "runin" with George Rector. The countess insisted upon smoking a cigaret in public while at his Broadway hotel. The countess is the famous bar-foot dancer who first shocked and then fascinated Newport, so that she had more commissions to teach than she could have fulfilled in three lifetimes. Rector is the suave manager of the hotel. He ordered her to stop smoking. She said she was a Russian noblewoman and that her father was minister of public instruction under the czar. But she had to stop smoking just the same. She smashed her fan and a shell glass of milk, and then consented to be bundled out to an automobile. She says she will go back again and smoke.
